

Romanian rural market, between the opportunities and limits of European Union market requirements

Author Dumitru Patriche

N/A

Abstract:

The creation of the Single Market of the European Union has been one of the processes that have energized economies of Western countries. Starting the process, particularly such as the emergence of this market has generated a more efficient allocation of factors of production and a stronger competitive climate, causing both phenomena, in turn, a substantial improvement in economic performance in the space of community concerned.

Keywords: rural market, single market, economic performance

JEL codes: O18, Q13